Columbus will officially be named a Servant Leadership City on June 16 at the Columbus Convention & Trade Center. It's the first award of its kind from the Greenleaf Center, considered the premiere servant leadership teaching organization in the U.S.

It's named for Robert Greenleaf, a former executive who coined the phrase. He died in 1990.

The day begins with a luncheon at noon, followed by workshops and local tours.

The Columbus celebration precedes the Greenleaf Center's national meeting in Atlanta.

"This is the first (award). I don't know when there will be another," Kent Keith, CEO of the Greenleaf Center, said in a May interview.
